fear we all feel in the face of an unknown menace. Some of those patients do indeed race from clinic to clinic and doctor to doctor, waiting for a magic, reassuring word. Some doctors, overworked and pressed with the acute problems of many patients, complain a great deal when this happens. They forget what they should know better than their patients, the difference between reasonable anxiety and neurotic obsession. They also seem to forget the unpleasant fact that cancer is the second greatest cause of death: folks have a right to worry about it.

What was once a picture of the deepest gloom is now lightened by many rays of hope. The most painstaking analyses of the figures on cancer deaths in the U. S., for instance, show unmistakably that medicine is getting the upper hand over man's enemy within.

The deaths from cancer continue, but they decrease—slowly, agonizingly slowly, but they decrease. The number of cases increases—rapidly here, slowly there—but a "case" is no longer equivalent to death. As the years pass, the number of victims who live literally in the valley of the shadow, who sleep fearfully each night lest they find death to be their silent bedfellow, may creep upward. But with courage and imagination and intelligence, the dragon of their fear will be destroyed.

Never can free men relax until that tyranny is overthrown. It can be overthrown from the outside or the inside. Those who have been enslaved by it will overthrow it if we prevent its gaining further victories.
